pyrethrins and pyrethroids, used in thousands of supposedly "safer" pesticides, accounted for more than 26 percent of all fatal, "major" and "moderate" human incidents reported to the EPA in 2007, a 300 percent increase in the last decade. It also pushed the agency to review its pesticide monitoring system in 2008 and modernize collection of data in 2009.

Most people know that mining coal is a dirty business. The Center reported that the reality of the industry that supplies half of America's power falls far short of its "clean coal" public relations campaign. In an extensive report, the Center exposed the unintended consequences of "longwall mining," said to be a superior way to extract coal than removing entire mountaintops. The story featured farmers and others who have found their land's springs and streams gone, presumably swallowed by gaping tunnels burrowed beneath their land. This report was particularly useful to the environmental law community and other environmental groups who work on the issue of clean coal and climate change.
